HOME NEAR LANGHORNE

Victim of Heart Attack Was Retired Employee of Telephone Co.

LANGHORNE, Aug. 5.—When his master, George Owen Pooley, was fatally stricken as he walked down the driveway of his home last evening, a pet water spaniel refused to leave Pooley's side.

A physician was summoned immediately to attend Mr. Pooley; and attempts by Mrs. Frances Pooley, wife of the stricken man, and of other individuals to remove the dog proved fruitless. A veterinarian was finally summoned to take charge of the dog, so that the lifeless body of Mr. Pooley could be removed.

The deceased had been under the care of a physician for some time, but his death came as a shock to members of his family.

For a period of 31 years Mr. Pooley had been employed by the Bell Telephone Company, he retiring several years ago. In 1937 he accepted a position as an automotive engineer with an automobile concern in Philadelphia.

Mr. Pooley is survived, in addition to his wife, by two sons, Owen E. Pooley, Washington, D. C.; Elmer Pooley, Baltimore, Md.; his mother, Mrs. Beulah Pooley, Clifton, N. J.; two sisters and one brother.

Announce Repulse of New German Night Raid

MOSCOW, Aug. 5.—(INS)—Repulse of a new German night raid on Moscow was announced officially today while a Soviet high command communiqué admitted a new Nazi salient had been formed midway between Smolensk and Leningrad.

Authorities declared several groups of German planes attempted to raid Moscow last night and that a few of these succeeded in penetrating the city's defenses. The others were said to have been dispersed by anti-aircraft fire and night fighters.

A few incendiaries dropped on Moscow without causing damage, it was stated. One German plane was declared to have been shot down.

The announcement marked the first mention of Kholm as a scene of fighting and indicated the Germans have pushed a wedge into the northern wing of the front some 60 miles deeper than Novorzhnev, where action was announced in several communiqués last week.

Japan Wants Bases From Thailand Now

By Joseph Dynan
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

TOKYO, Aug. 5.—(INS)—With all Japanese shipping to the United States halted, the Tokyo newspaper Kokumin hinted broadly today that Thailand (Siam) should come to terms with Japan.

(Editor's Note: For a week or more the Far East and Europe have been flooded with reports that Japan has demanded military bases from Thailand. So far, however, there has been no official announcement to this effect.)

The Kokumin editorial on Thailand mined no words and flatly accused the United States of participating in a diplomatic squeeze play on that government. It said:

"Our people are concerned over Thailand, which is under merciless pressure from America, Britain and the Chungking regime. . . ."

United States Wants Brazil to Protect Azores

By Kingsbury Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—(INS)—The United States Government, it was learned today, wants Brazil to take over protection of the Azores the moment there appears any danger of the Portuguese Atlantic islands falling into Nazi hands.

The United States has approached the Brazilian Government on the subject through diplomatic channels, and has pointed out to Brazil the grave menace which it believes Nazi occupation of the Azores would mean to the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

The position of this government is that the Azores must be prevented at all costs from falling into German hands and that if it is found necessary to take over the protection of the islands, Brazil, because of the common bond of heritage between the Brazilian people and the Portuguese inhabitants of the Azores, is the most suitable nation among the American republics to do the job.

This government is willing to pledge to Brazil its full support, including any naval or military assistance that may be required, in any steps that country may take to establish a temporary protectorate over the Azores in event the Nazis move into Portugal or otherwise threaten occupation of the Portuguese islands.

Brazilian leadership in any American move to take over protection of the Azores is considered by this government to be desirable from many angles.

Thugs Get $76,000 At Stroudsburg Bank

STROUDSBURG, Aug. 5.—Stepping quickly from an automobile and "covering" them with firearms, two men today held up the janitor and bookkeeper of the First National Bank of Stroudsburg on a street here and robbed them of $76,000 in bank funds.

The holdup occurred directly across the street from the Stroudsburg post-office where the men were taking the money for shipment to Washington. The victims, Lewis Heiney, the janitor, and Ralph Rheinfels, the bookkeeper, said four men were in the car. One got out and waved a revolver at them, they told police. He was followed by a second man who brandished what appeared to be a machine gun.

The men leaped back into the car and headed for South Stroudsburg. A policeman, answering an alarm raised by the bank employees, gave chase but was unable to overtake the machine. State Police, who broadcast an immediate alarm to intercept the fleeing bandits, said they thought the car was headed for New Jersey.

The bandit machine, believed stolen, bore Penna license plates which, state troopers reported, were either SC556 or FC556.

Motor license records gave SC556 as the number of the plates issued to Charles Hetzel, of 1079 Lincoln Ave., Easton. State Police asserted, and FC556 as the number issued George Blair, 2141 Kenneth Ave., New Kensington, Pa.

Search Soviet Embassies

Berlin, Aug. 5.—German authorities announced today that the Soviet embassies in Berlin and Paris have been searched in reprisal for the asserted action of Russian authorities in searching the German embassy in Moscow.

An official announcement said—"The search of the Russian embassies yielded sensational results. Evidence was found that the Soviets continued to carry out murder and sabotage under protection of diplomatic immunity. It also proved the embassies served as outposts of the Comintern in its fight against western civilization."

Scarcity of Farm Labor May Cause Food Shortage

HARRISBURG, Aug. 5.—A serious food shortage faces the people of Pennsylvania and the nation unless additional farm labor is secured quickly. Department of Agriculture officials predicted today.

The demands of the National Defense Program and the vast amount of food being shipped abroad have made serious inroads upon the food reserves of Pennsylvania, officials reported.

They declared that the reserves could not be maintained since a scarcity of farm labor was causing untold waste of grain and vegetables left in the fields because of insufficient labor to harvest it.

Referring specifically to the tomato crop, a spokesman said that the Federal Government has ordered Pennsylvania to increase its acreage. It was increased about 11 per cent, he said, but tomato export has jumped 50 per cent.

144 BOYS REGISTERED AT CAMP NEAR CHALFONT

Happy Vacation Provided For Underprivileged Boys

THIRD YEAR FOR CAMP

NEW BRITAIN, Aug. 5.—A camp located near Chalfont, known as the Tri-Square camp, is the happy vacation land at present for 144 underprivileged boys.

Operated on a military basis for boys between the ages of 10 to 16, the camp seeks boys who come well recommended but who have no other place to go. Each boy is sponsored by a Mason or some organization interested in the camp.

This is the third year for the camp in New Britain township, but the seventh season all told. The Masonic fraternity owns the camp site of nearly 13 acres and each year improvements are added. Plans are under way right now for the erection of the first permanent dormitory building to be erected as soon as funds are available. Under the present set-up the camp barely pays for itself each year, camp officials donating their time to the cause of the underprivileged youngster.

SELLERSVILLE YOUTH IS MAKING GOOD IN NAVY

PEPS UP WAIKIKI BEACH

SELLERSVILLE, Aug. 5.—Russell K. Shelly, Jr., is listed as a "home-town boy who made good" with the U. S. Navy.

Shelly, a music producer for men in service in Hawaii, enlisted in October. At present he is composing and arranging music in that island land of melody, and is gaining wide acclaim among Hawaiian audiences.

Young Shelly, aged 24, advanced quickly to the position of assistant bandmaster in a few short months. He also has won something that men in his profession prize still higher than position. That is acclaim from his hearers. He is one of the idols of the U. S. S. California, flagship of the Pacific Fleet, for he has brought some of the melodies of the East along in his own arrangement. He has played his way right into the hearts of the sailors and soldiers at Honolulu. When they played his composition, "You're Not the Kind of a Gal for a Guy Like Me," the song met with thunderous applause. Since then he has become right hand man to one of the leading bandmasters of Honolulu, and he helps select compositions and equipment for his outfit.

The young Bucks county hand leader had already tasted success before he went into the service. He had started out with a five-piece orchestra not long after his graduation from

ALL STEELWORK FOR FLEETWINGS PLANT, HERE

Twelve Hundred Tons Arrive and Is Being Erected In Position

BUILDING TAKING FORM

The work of erecting the big new addition to the plant of Fleetwings Inc., is progressing at a very satisfactory rate of speed. The structural steel is being erected and other phases of the work going ahead.

Three big cranes are at work, some engaged in unloading the steel while others are hoisting the big girders into position.

All of the 1200 tons of steel required for the plant have arrived on the grounds and is being unloaded and erected as rapidly as possible.

It is expected that the riveting gangs will swing into action on Thursday and weld the structure into a complete unit.

It is estimated that all of the steel structural work will be completed in about one month. Then the walling in, placing of floors and other work will be pushed with equal vigor.

The outline of the manufacturing building is now taking form and some idea of the size of the building and its general shape can now be obtained.

The steel structural workers climb about the big framework like monkeys, shouting words of instruction to those who man the cranes and hoists. Height and narrow footing means nothing to them.

The railroad siding is filled with carloads of steel and each day gangs of men are engaged in unloading these cars. Where only a few weeks ago was a quiet field over-run with grass and weeds today is a busy center of activity.

BLOOD DONORS TO GET RESPIRATOR TONIGHT

TO HAVE INSTRUCTIONS

The Bristol Blood Donors tonight expect to receive the new resuscitator which was recently purchased with funds raised by public subscription. The mechanical resuscitator is designed for use in emergencies where natural respiration has failed from any cause, with resulting asphyxia. In such cases of respiratory failure as drowning, electric shock, carbon monoxide poisoning, and asthma, it produces respiration mechanically at normal rhythm and pressures, reliably and effectively. It automatically adjusts itself to the lung capacity of adult or infant.

Since this is accomplished without the necessity for the manual method of artificial respiration, it is naturally possible to operate the apparatus on cases of internal injury and body burns.

By merely turning the lever the resuscitator can be converted from an automatic machine to an aspirator or an inhalator.

The machine is used by police and fire departments and first-aid squads. The Blood Donors are to be instructed in the use of this new apparatus and will make it part of their equipment in responding to emergency cases, such as drowning and etc.

It is the claim of the manufacturers of the machine that due to the principle of fixed positive and negative pressure in alternating sequence the resuscitator automatically adjusts itself to the volume of the patient's lung whether it be a tiny premature infant or a large adult.

The apparatus automatically breathes at a near normal respiratory rate. It will breathe at the rapid rate of a newborn baby or the slower rates of a child or adult patient.

When any obstruction is blocking off the flow of oxygen into the patient's lung the resuscitator immediately warns the operator by a rapid clicking signal. Thus valuable time is not lost before it is discovered that the air passages are obstructed.

CORONER'S JURY HOLDS DOYLE FOR NEXT GRAND JURY

Verdict Says He Operated Car In "Reckless and Careless" Manner

SALVATORE TASSI DIED

Witnesses Claim Doyle's Car Was Driven Over Into Other Lane of Traffic

A coroner's jury, last night, held William Doyle, Rogers Road, Bristol Township, responsible for the fatal injuring of Salvatore Tassi, 26, 3395 Agate street, Philadelphia, on June 6th, when Doyle's car crashed into one operated by Tassi.

The verdict of the jury read that they found Doyle guilty of "reckless and careless" driving and the jury recommended that Doyle be held for the next session of the grand jury. Doyle's bail of $2800 was immediately renewed before Justice of Peace, James Laughlin.

The inquest was held in the Municipal Building here by Bucks County Coroner, Dr. H. Clayton Moyer, assisted by Deputy Coroner, Dr. Charles P. Sampel. The jury consisted of James H. Brooks, foreman; Herbert A. Pettit, Francis Nealis, Paul Gruber, Harry M. Arnold, and Mrs. Hilda Matlock.

The first witness was Dr. Sampel who testified that he had viewed the body in the Harriman Hospital. He described an injury in the forehead above the left eye and said that Tassi died of a fractured skull. Dr. Sampel stated that Doyle, driver of the car which struck the car of Tassi told him that he had been drinking.

Private Lawler, Penna. Motor Police, Oxford Valley Barracks, was the next witness. The officer stated that the accident occurred on the evening of June 6th on Route 13, near the Bristol Cemetery. The two cars collided on the north side of the highway. Tassi was driving west and Doyle was traveling east. Private Lawler stated that several witnesses had stated that they believed that Doyle had been drinking. The officer stated that he telephoned the Harriman Hospital to have Doyle examined and that he had been pronounced under the influence of alcohol and unfit to operate a car. Doyle was also said to have told Private Lawler that he had had between 12 and 15 beers since about five o'clock in the afternoon. The accident occurred at about 10:30.

Photographs of the two cars after the crash and of the scene where the accident occurred were exhibited to the jury.

A blood test was also taken to determine the condition of Doyle. But due to an error in addresses the results of the tests were sent to District Attorney Biester and therefore could not be offered last night.

Tassi was accompanied by his mother and sister, Mrs. Philomena Nocenti, 51, and Miss Philomena Nocenti, 15. Both were slightly injured. They were not called to testify last night because they stated that they were asleep in the car at the time and did not know anything concerning the accident.

Phillip Mannherz, Edgely, said that he was driving along the Bristol Pike ahead of the Tassi car for a time and that he (Mannherz) passed the Tassi car before the accident. Mannherz told

RUSSIA SURPRISES THEM

From day to day Nazi news dispatch writers rely more and more on the shortness of man's memory. At several points Russian resistance is developing sixty-odd miles back of where the Germans had advanced more than a week ago against "slight resistance;" the Russians are bringing up reserves, of which the Nazis said ten days ago there were no more; there is heavy fighting at Smolensk, which the Nazis said last week was far behind them; and the campaigns along three sectors are "proceeding according to schedule" without proceeding at all.

The opinion in authoritative London quarters that the Nazi drive against the Soviet Union is slowing down, if it has not been checked entirely, is doubtless based as much upon these strange German reports as it is upon word from British observers in Russia. There are several indications against taking an optimistic view of Russia's position.

First, there is the dread of wishful thinking, which has got Hitler's foes into trouble on other occasions; second, there is a lingering belief, amounting almost to a conviction, that Russian production was a joke; third, there is a realization that the Russians are clever propagandists; and fourth, Stalin was an enigma for so long that it is not easy to estimate the degree of his determination to see this fight through to the end.

On the basis of six weeks of the struggle, with the Nazis achieving no important objective, it appears that Russia's military strength consists of more than unwieldy manpower. It is probably that although Russian industry has been hampered in its development by a lack of skill in organization and by strict political control, much more military equipment was produced than was generally realized.

It may turn out, indeed, that Stalin was the only head of a European state who started to get ready about the time Hitler started his antics.

SPEED AND WASTE

Kansas, Oklahoma, Indiana and other Midwestern states are experiencing dispossession of farms and homes through establishment of government defense plants, hydroelectric projects and other activities. But other regions will witness nothing in the form of residential disturbance to compare to that which the congested East is experiencing.

Families of more than 10,000 persons of Homestead and Duquesne, Pennsylvania, have learned they will have to find new homes as a result of a government contract to build two new steel plants at a cost of $85,000,000. Major parts of the two fair-sized towns will literally have to be cleared away to make room for the new manufacturing plants.

The operation calls for the razing of 1,363 houses, 68 groceries, 46 miscellaneous shops, 28 saloons, 11 churches, two convents, five schools, five clubs, many filling stations, planing mill, waterworks, knife factory, machine shop, baking company, and many other structures.

In time probably most of these buildings could be moved to another site where they would still be serviceable. But the expeditious American way seems to be to tear them down and build new ones. It is wasteful, but quick. And America is insisting upon speed.

PUPPET LOVE by Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

They drove the next day past cotton fields that were clouds of blossoms, peach orchards heavy with fruit, corn, golden tasselled, through Georgia. Negroes called greetings, or worked, singing, in the fields.

Nicky gave a show late in the afternoon in a mill town, with the whirr of bobbins in the air. Pinched, dreary looking, old-eyed youngsters watched with solemnity that tore at the heart.

Driving on toward Savannah that night, with the lights of Nicky's car following brightly behind, Chris came to another decision.

He was going into business. He was going to build trailers, Allen trailers—the Bishop name never occurred to him. He would incorporate in them the devices he had designed. He would give employment to men and women—but mostly men, men working at decent wages who could take care of wives and kids, and have nice little houses such as he'd seen in the many towns through which he'd travelled.

Late that night, they pulled into Savannah where the fair opened the next afternoon. Aloysius Bring expected to meet them there, and Chris was almost thankful. He suddenly didn't want to be alone with Nicky. There was a strangeness between them, a disturbing awareness, that broke into silences or Nicky's hilarity. After Tampa, he could take his chances, but not now . . . there was too much to explain.

The camp was modern and very crowded. Before they had pulled into their allotted parking spaces, a dozen folks were waiting for them . . . friends they made on the road. A one-armed sign painter and his wife, from Memphis, a former state representative from Wisconsin, and his wife, two elderly sisters from Massachusetts who cast horoscopes and sold books on astrology, —and Ed Curtis, the ex-postman. The little old fellow grinned shyly as he took Chris's outstretched hand. "I swear I didn't know your outfit," he murmured admiringly, as he walked around the gaudy Nemesis. "You sure have perked up, I says to Ma, there's some kind of a show wagon, and she says it can't be Nicky."

"But it is," cried Nicky gaily. "And where's Ma? And what are you doing in Georgia now?" "I think you two are right sweet to treat me this way." He glanced nervously at Chris. "You know Ma didn't have much faith in you. She thought you were the slippery kind."

"He's just a solid citizen in disguise," Nicky laughed, tucking her arm through the old man's. "And the best gutter-out-of-ditches you ever saw."

"My word, you look pretty!" Curtis beamed at Nicky. "But come along and see Ma. We're only stoppin' a short time. She took a notion she'd like to make some butter outa Georgia peaches right off the trees. Soon as she gets another dozen jars put up, we're going along to Virginia for the yellow tomato crop."

Chris, jacking the trailers for the night, watched Curtis and Nicky go down the avenue of bobbed houses. Three-quarters of those trailers were occupied by men like Ed Curtis—middle-aged and elderly men on pensions, truly having a golden sunset to their lives because of a little security. They never made a lot. But they had enough. All of them were happier, he was sure, than his father had ever been.

Happiness! He really had never heard much about it until he took to the road. Happiness implied emotion and the Bishops were never emotional. They were correct, but cold—deliberately cold.

Chris was smoking his pipe on the steps of Nemesis when Nicky returned from her visit with the Curtis.

"Ma Curtis is all over with apologies. She never dreamed you'd turn out so well."

"Have I turned out well?" "So far so good," she admitted ruefully. "Let's go walking. You can feel this is an old town."

It was an old town, an enchanting town. There was a modern section, too, with tall buildings, smart shops and bright lights, but they avoided these. They found, instead, exquisite gardens, and old streets that might have come from Old World prints; houses with overhanging balconies; courts with fountains. . . .

There was a curiosity shop where Chris bought Nicky a machete with a carved handle—a lean, wicked looking instrument. They wandered along the docks fragrant with the sea, and the twang of turpentine, and the warmth of a near-tropic night. Then they lingered to watch a mammoth moon rise.

"You don't suppose this is all really so, do you?" Nicky asked breathlessly. Her shoulder touched Chris's arm was soft and vibrant and fearfully alive. "If I shut my eyes, will it vanish?"

"Don't shut your eyes," he said swiftly. He couldn't bear it—the sight of the downward sweep of lashes on her cheeks.

Then she remarked, "You know, for the past month, it's been sort of a dream when I'm awake; our life, a kind of a little Paradise — on wheels."

"Have you been that happy?" "Yes."

He thought she must hear the pounding of his heart through the stillness of the night. It was shutting out all other sound to him, making even his voice distant and husky. "Nicky!"

"Yes?" A smaller, expectant yes. "In five more days we'll be in Tampa . . . our last engagement."

She nodded, her head very close to his shoulder. For a second he rested his cheek against her head, his arm tightened about her. He wanted to say so much — no, he didn't really—he didn't want to bother her with words. If he kissed her now, no words would be necessary. He couldn't—he mustn't—not until he could tell her who he was.

"And then what?" Nicky prompted softly.

"Oh," she said, with her faculty for making one small sound equal a dictionary. "Let's find that little coffee shop we noticed."

She was away from him—not only out of his arms, but far away, in that remote little shell that could be Nicky. She whistled softly and slid her hands into the pockets of her slacks. With all his heart he wanted to cry out, to call her back, to recapture the moment he had lost. What if he never found it again?

The camp was quiet when they got back—as silent as they. "How about waiting up until I finish a cigarette?" Chris asked. That last smoke had become a rite.

"Not tonight," Nicky said wearily. "We've covered a lot of ground today." She turned away from his quick glance. "Don't you want me to help you with your bed?"

"Thanks," he murmured, opening the door of the Arab. Quickly and silently they pushed the levers that lowered the beds. Before Chris could get to his feet, Nicky, with a swift good night, was gone.

Chris came out in time to see her disappear into Nemesis, and to catch the glimmer of a figure, dodging around the opposite side of the trailer—a thick-set figure of a man, with feet in white shoes like canvas-covered flatirons. There was only one pair of flat feet like that in the world!

Instantly Chris was after him. If this was Washington Bedloe as he hoped . . .

An alley was formed between the rear of the parked trailers and a high wire fence covered with a tangle of jasmine and vines that were strangers to Chris. Down this dim passage took the sprinter in the white shoes. Overhanging trees, dripping with moss, added to the difficulty of going.

Chris hurried giant rooks curled like black snakes in his way while whipping aside offending vines and swaying moss. The path seemed an endless line of all the trailers in the United States.

But the end was the intruder's undoing. The mossy ground was soft and slippery. In making a fast turn, he skidded, lurched into the stockade and bounced to the side of the nearest trailer to be caught by Chris on the rebound.

Bishop's powerful hand was strengthened by a month of hard labor and a spirit of high anger. His fingers dug a firm hold into the fugitive's neck and, over his panting protests, dragged him into the camp street and the light.

"What were you doing around those trailers?" Chris demanded, throwing him against the stockade.

"You didn't pass fast enough, Bedloe. I don't like your face and I don't like your habits."

"G—g—gettin' tough, are you?" "I most certainly am. I'm on to your game now. Just a private dick, huh? A snooper!"

"What are you goin' to do about it?"

Chris shot his fist into the detective's jaw, and the latter swarmed at him head down, knuckles flying. Soon a hard right cross to Bedloe's chin sent him spinning through the rear gate of the camp enclosure into the wooded lot beyond, with Chris following in staccato fury.

"Add this—and this—to your report," Chris gasped implacably, while planting punch after punch with fair accuracy. "Tell whoever hired you—to come down and—get some of this, too!"

"Stop! You're crazy!" panted Bedloe. "You don't know—what you're doing!"

But it soon required all of Bedloe's wind to retreat from Bishop's blows. At last the detective took to the woods.

Chris watched him go, his white shoes a blur in the darkness. With satisfaction, he rubbed his bruised knuckles and cheeks. Then he strode back to the Arab, while musing: Let him report that to Rodney Baddington Grant, tell him to come and get his share of un-Bishop-like wrath!

Nicky lay in her bunk, squinting her eyes against the morning sun streaming through Nemesis' heavily screened window. From where she lay she could see the canvas and frame edge of the Arab against a background of tall trees, hanging with moss. The air was heavy with jasmine and magnolia, combined with a strange, pungent odor concocted of gasoline, burning oil, and coffee, the essence of the trailer camp, the note of continuity, that made one feel at home in any section of the country.

Morning sounds buzzed outside her window, but she was in no hurry to rise. Why should she? There was nothing to do until the show at two o'clock.

AL TURNER, LANKY COLORED LAD FROM FALLSINGTON, STOPS WINNING STREAK OF DOMINICK VACCA, YOUNG ITALIAN

Fighting his best bout of his amateur career, Al Turner, lanky colored youngster from Fallsington, stopped the winning streak of Dominick Vacca, sturdy young Italian from the Pen-mar Club. Vacca had won 15 straight bouts before Turner gave him his three-round defeat.

There was no doubt as to the Diamond fighter's victory. The votes of the officials were unanimous and in the final session, Vacca appeared out on his feet as Turner rushed him to the ropes and was swinging lefts and rights to the mid-section as the final bell sounded.

Turner's victory was only one of the four credited to the Diamond Sporting Goods team at the St. Ann's Arena. Clem Kinsey kayoed his man as did Dave Montgomery, while Frank "Rip" Kelly was a decision winner.

In the wind-up, Carman Orrino beat his foe, giving Seibold A. C. its victory of the night. Pen-mar, of Philadelphia, won two of their five bouts.

The first session of the Turner-Vacca fight saw the Falls boy do plenty of missing. Vacca stood back and counter-punched with hard blows. Turner did all the leading but towards the close of the session was on the receiving end of a right to the jaw, the sound of which could be heard at the ring-side.

Both boys made a whirlwind round of the second. It was matter of swinging both fists from start to finish with Turner getting better timing out of his blows and landing more effectively. Vacca seemed to be tiring at the close of the canto which set the stage for Turner's finish.

Turner came out fast in the final round and had two lefts and a right to Vacca's face before the Philadelphia could get started. Turner kept pecking away, while Vacca held back waiting to get in a murderous blow. He did land one hay-maker punch but Turner shouldered the punch and it just glanced off. The Diamond boy then cornered the Pen-mar fighter and lambasted him with body blows just before the bell sounded.

After receiving a terrific beating for two rounds, Clem Kinsey, Diamond batter from Yardley, found an opening in the final round and twice sent his foe, Don Daly, from the Passon Club, to the floor before Referee Ed McGinn stopped the fight, giving it to the colored boy by a technical knockout after two minutes and four seconds of the round had elapsed.

There was no doubt that if the fight had gone to a decision, Daly would have been the victor for in the first two sessions he peppered the Diamond boy with everything and only fighting instinct kept Kinsey from hitting the canvas in the second as Daly was hitting with both fists and Kinsey was wobbling from side to side.

Kinsey started as if he would make fast work of Daly but he was fooled. The Diamond boy landed an effective right but the Philadelphia came back with rights and lefts and then two uppercuts which shook Kinsey. Kinsey's blows began to get light as the bout progressed.

Realizing that his only hope for a victory was a kayo, Kinsey waited for an opening in the last round. At one time he had Daly on the ropes and just missed a hay-maker brought up from the floor. He sparred around again, took a right to the side of the head, and then swung a round-house punch which found its mark on Daly's jaw. Down went the colored boy, but he got up and began to reel about the ring. He tried his best to hold on but Kinsey landed again and Daly hit the floor for the second time. When he arose, it was evident he could not continue and so Referee Ed McGinn did the best thing, stopped the fight and awarded it to Kinsey on a technical knockout.

Carman Orrino, Seibold, outslugged his opponent, Tom Carletini, Light-house Boys Club, to gain the three-round decision. Carletini appeared game and took the hardest of Orrino's blows but did not start to feel any effect from them until the closing round. For the first two sessions, Carletini matched Orrino punch for punch but Orrino was the aggressor and always landed first, Carletini being content to counter-punch in an effort to catch Orrino off-guard. At the close of the last round, Carletini landed his best punch, a right which caught Orrino on the side of the face but this did not daunt Orrino as he came back to put Carletini in bad shape.

Being the aggressor from start to finish and flooring his foe in the second round, Frank "Rip" Kelly earned the decision over Nick Putnick, of the Pen-mar club. The Diamond fighter won the three rounds and the only damage he sustained was a nose bleed in the second round.

Putnick was not very active in the fight, doing a lot of posing in the three rounds. His only effective punch was a straight jab which Kelly avoided most of the three rounds. In the meantime, Kelly was landing plenty of blows at Putnick and twice cornered his foe to rip him with fast swinging rights and lefts. In the second, Putnick caught a punch under his heart. He went down but was up before Referee McGinn could get near him for a count.

Bert Harris, of the Mount Holly Club, got the three-round nod over Walt Kirstein, Seibold Club. Only in the first session did Kirstein show any signs of coping with his foe and in the last round the Croydon boy was a little groggy as Harris pumped over some stinging blows. Kirstein attempted to match Harris blow for blow in the last round but was shook up with rights which landed on the face.

Russ Regalbuto, Southside A. C., announced as the Inquirer A. C. champion, and Santo Bucci, Pen-mar, junior national A. U. runner-up, fought one of the bouts and gave an exhibition that displeased the crowd from start to finish. Bucci "was given the decision."

The first two bouts of the night ended in knockouts. In the first of these, Tony Bronco, Pen-mar, stopped George Yaffe, Seibold, in the first round.

Yaffe, a newcomer in the amateur ranks, had the reach on Bronco but

ST. ANN'S DEFEATS ODD FELLOWS; SCORE 6-2

With a 6-2 victory over the Odd Fellows, St. Ann's A. C. climbed from the cellar of the Bristol Suburban League when Paul Cervellero regained his last season form to pitch the Saints to their second consecutive win on St. Ann's field.

For four frames, Cervellero twirled no-run, no-hit ball and it wasn't until one was gone in the fifth that Ashby smacked a two-bagger to center. But Cervellero got by this frame but ran into trouble in the next inning when a pair of errors and a hit by Morrill gave the Oddies their lone two markers.

The Saints had their big inning in the fourth when 11 batters stepped to the plate and three of them received hits while four others got on base via passes or being hit with a pitched ball. In all, five tallies came over the plate. In all, St. Ann's had but four hits off Vandegrift but his wildness helped the Wood Streeters to their runs.

The Odd Fellows played fine ball all day, stopping two St. Ann's rallies with twin-kills. An Odd Fellows' threatening inning in the first was subdued when Watson lined into a double play, D'Angelo to Barbetta to DeLuca.

Sellersville-Perkasie high school in 1935, having studied arrangement and composition in the music department of Temple University two years after leaving high school. When he enlisted in the Navy last Fall, his orchestral experience counted 15 points. He plays on a half dozen instruments, although he often leans hardest on his first love, the saxophone, which he learned to "toot" to perfection.

From there "Sig" Shelly, as musicians knew him, jumped head first into the Navy. He knew from hearing his friends in the home town talk that a Navy band man gets plenty of travel, which is what a tune juggler needs. They sent him from Philadelphia to Norfolk, Va., last October. There he got his classification and sufficient training to determine how high he could climb. His first big assignment then was to go to Washington, D. C., where he joined the official Navy band which played at President Roosevelt's inauguration.

The band was supposed to leave for San Diego in January, with Honolulu as the eventual destination. But, somehow, the sailors of Uncle Sam like their music hot, so Shelly's particular band outfit stayed on. They did not get away until June 2nd. They arrived in Hawaii, June 23rd, and have pepped up Waikei Beach and American melodies ever since.

Writing to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Shelly, Sr., here, the young sailor says the life on the ocean waves is a grand one. Cigarettes are six cents a pack, and ice cream sodas are only a nickel and contain a pint of ice cream. Business is having the greatest boom ever in Hawaii, he writes. The result is that the storekeepers seem not to be able to keep stock enough on hand.

If things stay as rosy for "Sig," he will stay in the full 20 years required before retirement and perhaps longer. He writes that he is just learning how pleasant life can be. He has met numerous talented people on the islands far out on the Pacific. He has played

PITCHERS BATTLE AS TEAMS FAIL TO SCORE IN LEAGUE CONTEST

Shackleton and Kryven Engage in Duel On Maple Beach Diamond

FEW HITS WERE MADE

Game May Be Replayed During Latter Part of Week

Hal Shackleton and Al Kryven hooked up in a tight pitchers' battle on the Maple Beach diamond last evening as the Rohm & Haas and Voltz-Texaco teams battled to a scoreless deadlock.

Take away Shackleton's wildness and he will be one of the best hurlers in the circuit. He proved this last evening as he failed to issue a pass and held the first half champions to seven hits. Of these, only one, a two-bagger by Puma, was the only extra base blow. In the pinches, Shackleton proved very effective.

Al Kryven used his fast ball to a good advantage against the gasoleros as he held them to five bingles. He passed two batters and only Andy Moore connected for more than one hit. Both Kryven and Shackleton had nine strikeouts in the seven-inning contest. Arrangements are being made to replay this contest during the latter part of the week.

His rating now is second class musician, which he received less than eight months after entering the service.
